

Dr. Enoma Alade

Dr. Enoma Alade is a dentist with over two decades' experience of providing healthcare; with expertise in operational management and strategic leadership. She is also the Founding partner of Anadach Consulting Group; which is a global healthcare strategic consulting firm focusing on bringing innovative advice and services to clients and partners interested in transforming healthcare systems in emerging markets and developing economies.

Dr. Alade owned a successful private practice in California for over ten years and has worked in both the private and public healthcare sectors. She was previously Dental Director at a Federally Funded Facility where she was responsible for overseeing the care of at least 30,000 patients a year. In this role, she spearheaded the strategy, management and execution of departmental operations; and served on the Executive Management Core Team which was responsible for seeing all the delivered medical and dental services, maintaining accreditation by Federal Bureau of Health and JCAHO, and implementing one of the earliest fully functional electronic health information systems in the US.

She earned a BDS degree from University of Ibadan, a DDS degree at New York University, USA and an MPH in Healthcare Policy and Management from University of California, Los Angeles, USA. She completed her post-doctoral residency training in General Practice and Hospital Dentistry from the Seton Hall University, New Jersey, USA.